

Summary

Abdolkarim Soroush: Religion, Modernity and Secularism in Contemporary Iranian Philosophy

Abdolkarim Soroush is one of the most important contemporary Iranian philosophers whose work is discussed in the Muslim world, in the West and beyond. The book presents Soroush's work by translations of five key texts focused on his philosophy of religion and political philosophy: first, Expansion and contraction of religious knowledge; second, Expansion of prophetic experience; third, Where is religion heading in modern times?; fourth, Milk and Sugar: On the reason for religious intellectualism; and fifth, Radical secularism. An introduction was written by Zora Hesová, a research fellow at the Center of Global Studies, Institute of Philosophy, Czech Academy of Sciences in Prague. The translation of the first two texts was made by Zora Hesová and of the three other ones by Magdalena Bánská.
