'Images of science' in Interwar Czechoslovakia: State, Language, Politics.

Jan Jakub Surman (Masarykův ústav a Archiv AV ČR)

A few years after the World War I ended, Prague academic milieu became a highly complex one. As part of post-imperial Central Europe Czechoslovakia was home to Czech, German, Russian and Ukrainian higher schools, which developed active academic communities around them. Using Yehuda Elkana's "images of knowledge", I will propose an analytical framework to analyse this multilingual intellectual landscape. By looking at the post-WWI conceptual insecurities and global renegotiations of science's conceptual framework, I will show how these "images" oscillated between state prerogatives, cultural allegiances and ideological prescriptions. This talk should also present an outline for the 5-year research project funded by the Lumina Quaeruntur fellowship of the Czech Academy of Sciences, "'Images of science" in Czechoslovakia 1918-1945-1968"
